If you are reading this newsletter, it is likely because you have or have had a child with CMO services or are a provider within the state's Children's System of Care (CSOC). Therefore, you should be aware that potential federal Medicaid cuts pose significant risks to New Jersey's behavioral health services. The state's Medicaid program, NJ FamilyCare, covers approximately 1.7 million residents, including 830,000 children and 80,000 young adults. Proposed reductions in federal funding could lead to a loss of up to $10 billion, jeopardizing access to essential services for vulnerable populations including treatment for serious mental illness, substance use disorders, and autism. All of these services are at risk due to potential Medicaid cuts.

Currently CMOs in New Jersey are functioning below the level of reimbursement that they had 12 years ago. Future cuts could impact the quality of services and robustness of our workforce. Medicaid is administered by the New Jersey Department of Human Services, but programming and services within DCF depend upon about $465 million in Medicaid funding, annually. New Jersey is one of 10 states which benefits from the statutory 50 percent floor on matching funds for most Medicaid services. Reducing the federal match for Medicaid could mean creating a $38.9 million budget gap for the Children's System of Care.

A summary paper put out by the Department of Children and Families details the impact of federal Medicaid funding and its potential loss: (https://www.nj.gov/dcf/documents/Impact_Congressional_budget_discussions.pdf)

Governor Murphy has expressed strong opposition to proposed federal Medicaid cuts, highlighting the potential loss of up to $10 billion in funding and the risk of 700,000 working-age enrollees losing coverage. Currently, Medicaid covers most CSOC services and 69 percent of children receiving services through CSOC are insured by Medicaid. Any reduction in federal matching would have to be entirely covered by state funds. NJ will not be able to make up for the level of proposed cuts and therefore services would have to be cut.

At this point, you might be asking, what can I do about this? Advocacy is needed on the federal level. At TCCMO, we are actively meeting with legislators to make sure they understand the critical services provided by the CMOs. We are coordinating and participating in calling and writing federal legislators (Senators and members of Congress) to make sure they know the devastating effects of any cuts to federal Medicaid in NJ. We need everyone to contact their elected officials to voice how valuable the Children's System of Care services are to families and that we don't support the cuts to Medicaid – the need cannot be overstated.

We can use our voices to make a difference and safeguard the services provided by TCCMO and the CMOs across the state that help NJ's children. Stay tuned for additional updates on how to contact your local elected officials about this important topic.

Youth Success Story

One of our own CMO youth, Caiden Talmadge, recently shared exciting news that exemplifies the power of the connections he has made while navigating services. His experiences ignited a strong desire for Caiden to help others who may face similar challenges.

Caiden applied to the social work program at Centenary University. He recently learned that he was ACCEPTED into the program with a scholarship! He attributes his desire to enter the social work field to the connections that have made a difference in his life as well as those that may have hindered him along the way.

Caiden is a very resilient young man who will make a difference in the lives of many youth and families as he begins his next chapter this fall!

Growing Greatness

Let's discuss Stand 3 of the Nurtured Heart Approach: ABSOLUTELY CLEAR!
How many of us have told a child "Clean your room!"

This statement could mean different things for different people, especially our intense kids, so we need to be more detailed. For example, "clean your room" could be "make sure there is nothing on the floor, your clothes are put away with the drawers shut, and your bed is made".

Being detailed and making these requests clear in advance creates opportunities for more positive interactions.

It also moves youth in the right direction because they know what is expected of them.

This week, try being more specific. See if it makes a difference in how things get done.

TCCMO offers small group trainings twice a month. Come find out more!

Pride in Partnership

April is Autism Awareness Month, and TCCMO was honored to co-host both the Warren County Annual Autism Awareness and Special Needs Resource Fair on April 3rd and the Hunterdon County Autism Awareness and Special Needs Resource Fair on April 29th.

These events provided families with valuable opportunities to learn about local autism and DD/ID providers, access essential resources, and participate in educational breakout sessions and parent panel discussions.

Attendees also had the chance to connect and network with other caregivers of children with special needs, fostering a stronger support network within the community.

The success of these events was a community effort, and we thank Hunterdon and Warren County CIACC for their dedication supporting our community.

National Developmental Disabilities Awareness Month

March is National Developmental Disabilities Awareness Month (DDAM). Established in 1987, this month aims to create opportunities for individuals with disabilities to participate in and contribute to their communities. The theme for DDAM in 2025 is "We're Here All Year." While it is nice to have a month dedicated to celebrating the unique contributions of individuals with developmental disabilities, while drawing awareness to areas where more support and inclusion efforts are needed, this theme reminds us that there are ways to raise awareness and advocate for individuals with disabilities all year long. Even something as simple as making sure someone with a disability can participate in the fun can have a huge impact. Check out <https://nacdd.org/ddam2025/> for more information.

Teen Mental Wellness Day

World Teen Mental Wellness Day, observed on March 2nd, raises awareness about the mental health challenges teenagers face. It encourages open discussions about mental well-being and highlights the importance of providing emotional support.

It's crucial to recognize the pressures that teens face: academic stress, social media influences, and navigating relationships, all of which impact their mental health. This day reminds us to foster a supportive environment where teens feel safe expressing their emotions and seeking help when needed.

Promoting strong mental wellness includes encouraging healthy coping strategies, active listening, and seeking professional help when necessary. Prioritizing mental wellness helps teens build resilience and navigate the complexities of adolescence with greater confidence and well-being.
